An example of a Ms. Glitch glitch is this quote which is not logical, or is it, coming as it does from Ms. Glitch? "We anticipated at the outset that everyone would never use the website." <http://newyork.cbslocal.com/2013/10/20/muslim-city-councilman-pleased-as-candidates-back-school-holidays/> NEW YORK - The New York Public Schools have included two holidays from an antichrist religion founded by a demon-possessed pedophile/mass murderer. The Muslim holidays to be observed are "The Feast of Murdered Jews" and "Nephew Bugging Day."

JT: I think they could lump all Muslim celebrations together and call it يكن لم الذي يوم النبي محمد Did I spell that wrong? I'm sorry. Now let's get on to the next entry.

"Wall Street went into a tizzy this weekend with the news that one of the nation's biggest banks agreed to fork over to the federal government $13 billion in fines related to its mortgage securities business. The [New York] Post quoted bank analyst Dick Bove of Rafferty Capital as saying the deal 'is a basic and fundamental attack on capitalism.' 'It is possible that the government is taking away the property of the JPMorgan shareholders without the shareholders having committed any crime or having any say in the expropriation of these funds,' Bove told the New York Post. The deal, announced Saturday, settles civil penalties with the U.S. Justice Department, but doesn't stop any potential criminal prosecution. The Federal Housing Finance Agency sued JPMorgan and 17 other banks for faulty mortgage bonds two years ago. Wall Street insiders were furious about the deal, noting that 80 percent of the mortgages being probed were actually acquired from the failing banks Washington Mutual and Bear Stearns. JPMorgan reportedly took over the risky portfolio at the request of the U.S. government in the wake of the 2008-09 financial meltdown. 'I just think that these banks like JPMorgan are being whacked like a pinata,' hedge-fund manager Doug Kass, told the Post. 'Ultimately, the earnings power of banks is being regulated out of them from the [Securities and Exchange Commission], from the Department of Justice.'" The same to you Barack!

Senator Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH) writes the following to Obama: "Given the existing problems with the [Healthcare.gov] website, I urge you to consider extending open enrollment beyond the current end date of March 31, 2014. Allowing extra time for consumers is critically important so they have the opportunity to become familiar with the website, survey their options and enroll. Further, in light of the difficulties individuals may be having with enrolling through healthcare.gov, I ask that you clarify how the individual responsibility penalty will be administered and enforced. If an individual is unable to purchase health insurance due to technical problems with enrollment, they should not be penalized because of lack of coverage." (<http://blogs.rollcall.com/wgdb/democrat-tells-obama-to-consider-delaying-individual-mandate/>)

"Like the man said: 'Never tell anybody outside the Family what you're thinking again.' Just don't ever forget it, or you're out."

JT: Loyalty didn't take place. However, methinks the quip about Valerie Jarrett is quite truthful. Furthermore, how can anyone in their right mind be loyal to the Obama thugs?

A Woodbridge woman was arrested after she shot a handgun into the air to scare off a group of boys who were attacking her daughter. Read more: <http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2013/oct/22/va-mom-charged-after-firing-gun-into-air-to-scare-/#ixzz2icxIEW4T>

JT: The police say that she should have called the police and that it was wrong to take matters into her own hands. Methinks the daughter was at fault and the boys were only defending themselves. Had the police been called the daughter might have been beaten to death and the boys would be set free because they were only defending themselves'!

Hitler's Enabling act and his manipulative, national health care scheme

DON'T sign up for the exchanges and DON'T give out your personal info

Obama is indeed a talented 'poser n' Chief. It takes rare talent to be standing in a pit of refuse, looking up arrogantly through the mountains of dung and then smoothly talk to the nation about the wonders and cost saving brilliance of ObamaCare. All this while 747s continue to drop more failure and lying ObamaCare dung on his head.

What types of statements have we been hearing from Obama and his talking heads the last few weeks in the face of this unprecedented failure? "ObamaCare stalled and the computer only had glitches due to the millions of people signing up for it." The truth—Almost zero could sign up. Now, Obama is forced to barely admit that they are working with the best techs in the business to fix a few lines of code on the web site. Again, all this was due to the endless hits on the site by millions of ObamaCare fans. Lie—Lie and triple Lie. Perhaps we should create a new site for those who want to sign up for something www.Obamacaredungandlies.com.

As the whole country knows (even lame brain media) hardly anyone could sign up for ObamaCare. Those who were naive enough to give out all of their personal information, thinking their application was being processed were wrong. The $292 million plus dollar computer from the dung heap couldn't even deal with the few applications that managed to get through the system. Only God knows where the few and mixed up applications managed to be thrown in the digital computer horror house. Perhaps there should be a movie made on this computer malfunction—TRON 4—We could all be thrown into this digital Obama war zone, suit up and fight for our lives.

Won't it be rich if, by January, the threatened fines still go out and the Obama supporters who signed up believing their messiah had delivered health care for them all will be among the first to be fined because the computer couldn't figure out what to do with their applications? As I boldly said in my article last week, let us ALL have a national resistance and not sign up for any exchanges. The House and the Senate have not protected Americans from the threats, compromised health care hidden all through ObamaCare and the fines. The only way for us all to survive and save ourselves is to boycott ObamaCare completely no matter what the threats!!!

Who would trust mountains of personal information to Obama and this incompetent monster computer system when only God knows what your information will be used for? I guarantee you it will be used to target Obama's enemies, conservatives, Christians, Tea Party folks and others.

When the 'single payer healthcare scheme' unfolds to magically fix everything—you know, the mess Obama is creating right now, your info will be used to allow Obama to seize payments out of your bank account and force you to join a single payer Government system. If you do not comply when he goes to this next step his response will be far more deadly—try seizing a whole payroll check, taking over assets, sending unannounced, armed officials to your home to confront or arrest you, foreclosing on your home...on and on. This is how a dictatorship unfolds. We must stop it now.

This is eventually what Obama wants and he will get it if the American people don't rise up...as in...DO NOT SIGN UP ANYWHERE FOR OBAMACARE EXCHANGES. This scheme is no different at all than Hitler's early and legal strategies of control in Nazi Germany with Hitler's Enabling act and his manipulative, national health care scheme. This was designed to control and deny care to those deemed unworthy to live. Let's see... 'Death panels' and limited 'cost effective' care for seniors with ObamaCare—there is a familiar ring. Do not sign up for ANY exchanges and DO NOT give out your personal information to them either.

JT: This article is more than explicit. It is a true warning and the truth! However, there are so many dumbed down Americans that they will not understand it!

Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) tells reporters, "We should be able to go forward. ...I have faith in technology and while there are glitches [with Healthcare.gov], this, uh, there are solutions as well so I'm optimistic that we'll be able to go forward on schedule. ...Well, I think somebody should fix it, and I'm a big, uh, you know, again, I'm a big believer, coming from where I do, uh, in California I have great confidence in technology and it's ability to, uh, uh, bring fresh eyes to the subject and, uh, uh, fix it, uh, so that we can go forward. Just fix it. Just fix it. ...Just fix it, so we can go forward. Fix the technology, and let's not get too bogged down in what happens if they're not able to fix it." JT: The following article needs to be read. Furthermore, the archives in question must not be returned to Iraq. There is no guarantee that they would not be destroyed. Fanatical Muslims – are there any other kind? – would definitely destroy them immediately and argue that Allah and Muhammad told them to do so. Their goal is to eradicate everything that is Jewish. The Jew-hater Barack Hussein Obama would certainly follow the wishes of the cultural jihadists in Iraq .

Raiders of the lost archive

Don't return the rescued written treasures of Iraqi Jews to Baghdad.

In 2003, a team of 16 American soldiers in Baghdad stumbled upon a lost treasure trove of thousands of documents belonging to Iraq's Jewish community.

These rare materials, thought to have been stored originally in synagogues and private Jewish homes, were sitting in a moldy, flooded basement of the mukhabarat, Saddam Hussein's feared secret police.

The collection, now referred to as the "Iraqi Jewish archive," contains "2,700 Jewish books and tens of thousands of documents in Hebrew, Arabic, Judeo-Arabic and English, dating from 1540 to the 1970s," including a 1568 Bible and several Torah scrolls, according to the National Archives in Washington.

After the initial 2003 discovery in Iraq, conservation teams from the National Archives determined that Baghdad did not have the appropriate facilities for preserving the documents, including temperature controls.

The Iraqi government thus permitted the Americans to take the collection to the US for conservation work, but only on condition of the archive's eventual return to Baghdad.

The current scheduled date of departure to Iraq is June 2014, less than one year away.

The notion of permanently sending these thousands of Jewish items to Iraq is absurd. Violence still abounds in Iraq; there would be no proper accessibility to or preservation measures for the archive.

I wonder if there are even interested audiences in Iraq or proper frameworks for contextualization, considering that fewer than a dozen Jews live in Iraq today, and Iraqis visiting the collection almost surely have never met a Jewish person before.

The Iraqi Jewish archive's discovery resonates personally; my grandfather was born and raised in a Jewish family in Baghdad. His family, along with the rest of Baghdad's Jewish community, was allowed to emigrate in the early 1950s in an Israeli airlift only if they renounced their citizenships and their property assets.

Thankfully my grandfather was still able to complete his studies at the American University of Beirut's medical school; he became a pediatrician.

But my grandfather's passport, upon leaving Iraq, said that he was "stateless." Meaning Iraq's Jewish community of 100,000-plus was essentially robbed of its major possessions and its nationality. They left their country of origin belonging to nowhere.

This remarkable recovery of Baghdad's Jewish archive is not the first time such a dramatic unearthing of Jewish materials in the Middle East and Central Asia has occurred. The most well known example is the Cairo Geniza, a collection of thousands of documentary fragments, many from the medieval period, found in that city's Ben Ezra Synagogue.

The Cairo Geniza was removed to England en masse by scholar Solomon Schechter in the 1890s.

“Geniza” refers to a hidden repository where Jewish communities stored written materials, from religious texts to private commercial and social papers such as handwritten letters and legal contracts.

And just within the past few years, scholars were stunned by discoveries of Jewish documents in Afghanistan dating from 1,000 years ago. This Afghanistan Geniza, rumored to number about 200 documents, was already dispersed to antiquities dealers around the world by the time the press heard about the trove.

The Israel Museum in Jerusalem is trying to acquire the Afghan Geniza items, and as of this past January, it had successfully purchased 29 documents from antiquities dealers.

Discoveries of these magnitudes typically lead to questions regarding possession.

Who rightfully owns a cultural heritage? Baghdad argues that the Jewish archive belongs to Iraq as a collection stored in the country. From that perspective, the Americans, if they keep the collection, are the raiders, rather than the saviors, of this lost archive.

However, for Iraqi Jews – the owners of the archive’s materials, as well as the descendants of its original owners – the Iraqi government is the true raider, the party that stole their citizenship, their property assets and their written treasures.

The American government should not set a precedent where Jewish artifacts recovered from the Middle East and Central Asia are sent back to war-torn countries, particularly with the current turmoil following the Arab Spring. If we suddenly heard about centuries- old Jewish documents found in Aleppo, and they were brought to America for conservation, would the US seriously entertain the idea of returning those precious materials to Syria? The Iraqi Jewish archive’s manuscripts, documents and holy books, some from five centuries ago and some from just 50 years ago, belonged to real people. Jewish people.

They and their relatives may still be alive to claim them.

The National Archives is now displaying 24 of the Iraqi Jewish artifacts in its new exhibit, “Discovery and Recovery: Preserving Iraqi Jewish Heritage,” which opened earlier this month and runs through January 5, 2014.

For those who cannot visit, the National Archives explains that “a special website to launch this fall will make these historic materials freely available to all online as they are digitized and catalogued.”

Ostensibly the digitization project is also supposed to offer consolation to those angry and upset about the Jewish archive’s planned removal to Iraq.

I’m deeply grateful to and wholeheartedly thank the National Archives for saving the Iraqi Jewish archive.

It's not enough, however, to digitize the collection. A noble and essential goal, to be sure, but frankly it's insufficient when these hundreds of- years-old documents already reside safely in the US.

What if this archive holds my great-grandfather's journal? What if those are my great-great-grandmother's letters that were rescued from ruin? Why won't I ever be able to feel and touch their own works? The entire collection must remain permanently in the United States or Israel. A Jewish institution would be the most fitting, but not strictly necessary. If the Iraqi Jewish materials can stay together in the National Archives, for instance, I'd be thrilled.

I write this op-ed as a concerned American woman with Ashkenazi and Sephardic heritage from Jewish communities around the world. Our family escaped the pogroms in Russia-Poland at the turn of the century, and they survived the 1941 pogrom in Baghdad, called the Farhud, against its Jews.

I write this op-ed for my grandfather.

I write this op-ed as a researcher of modern Jewish history who understands firsthand the extreme difficulties of finding new primary source materials from the Middle East and Central Asia, let alone translating them.

The crucial goal is not to send this Jewish archive to live in Iraq, where there's no security or open access for all scholars, researchers and global citizens. I write this op-ed as a descendant of a once vibrant community effectively expelled from Iraq, the country that still wants to keep Jewish belongings, if not Jewish citizens.
